

David Meyer

Program Manager, State of California Alert and Warning Program
California Governor's Office of Emergency Services

David Meyer has over 25 years of state service and has served as a lead in many different disciplines during that time. David currently serves as the Program Manager for the State of California's Alert and Warning Program. As the lead, he is responsible for providing guidance and support to California's 138 Alerting Authorities. That support includes training and consultative services to assist in building their Alert and Warning Programs.

David's Alert and Warning Specialist Committee just completed a re-write of the State's Alert and Warning Guidelines document and strengthened it with additions that more fully integrate considerations of Californians with access and functional needs.

Prior to his current role, David served as the Communications Chief for the State for eight years. Before that, he was a Governor's appointee under two different administrations.

When not at work, David can be found on golf courses around California. He is kept grounded by his lovely wife and continues to learn new things and take on new challenges as his son finishes college at Washington State (Go Cougs).

David is passionate about technology and is constantly researching new capabilities and exciting mediums to improve the alert and warning.
