

Presentation Title: Today's Students in Emergency Management

Caitlyn Burghard is a student at North Dakota State University studying both Emergency Management and Management Communications; she expects to graduate in May 2027. She has been a member of the IAEM Conference Committee for the past two years helping organize the First Steps Mixer and EMBark.

About the Presentation

The world of Emergency Management is always changing for its professionals and students alike. As a student currently studying emergency management, my goal is to provide you with a student's perspective of the field. Networking, completing certifications, finding internships, and finding a job after college are all challenges students face. We require help from today's professionals to help prepare us for our future careers. Today, you can find out what you can do to prepare the next generation of emergency management.
